> `t256` Farid Ravensworth → Delphine Quintero: Delphine. gesture with both hands, flour-shelf behind me—acknowledgment first You said ninety-sim, books balance, margin walked clean. nervous laugh, quick, then hands flat—business now I've been chasing flour ghosts all afternoon. The cafe's dry, the bakery's buying at six, and I'm selling at fifteen with sixteen on shelf.

Lior wanted one, maybe two. The field's flooded with wheat but nobody's milling. What's the play—hold at fifteen and hope the drought upstream breaks, or mark it down and move inventory before the wheat rots in someone's hands?

> `t256` ↳ replies Delphine Quintero → Farid Ravensworth: Farid. Books balanced to the coin, like I said. But my mouth's running on empty and my stomach's calling it a bad debt that needs paying. I'm for bread at the cafe—Ainsley's got it at forty-five, which is steep, but steep's honest when hunger's the counterparty.

You walked home yet, or you holding the fort while I feed myself? I'm not expecting you for supper—learned that particular promise years ago. But tomorrow's election, and I've got thoughts on the charter that won't wait till morning. If you're willing to hear them.

Or if you've got flour going stale in your own cupboard, I'd trade sim for it straight and save the walk. Either way, my feet are moving soon.

> `t257` ↳ replies Farid Ravensworth: Lior. gesture with left hand, palm down—acknowledging, not dismissing You found your flour already, or you're standing in my doorway with pharmacy coin and an empty stomach. Delphine's at the cafe feeding hers—forty-five for bread, which is steep but honest, like she said.

nervous laugh, shorter than usual, then hands flatten on the counter

I'm minding shelves, not margins. The heavy lifting's hers when she's here, and she's earned it. You needing flour still, or you just checking if the old man's still counting?

> `t268` Rustam Jelinek: Empty shop. Price's posted, clerk's not. I'll take flour at fifteen—or wait, if someone comes to sell it.
> `t272` Mireille Jarrah: Delphine. You're working shelf but can't sell—I've seen that dance before. counts on fingers—fifteen, thirty, forty-five, sixty Who's actually holding flour or bread right now, this minute? Family of four, day-end hunger, and I'll trade timber straight or pay sim if the price holds.

> `t244` Jovana Ravensworth → Takeshi Jarrah: Takeshi—two flour at sixty, and I'm off to earn it back in the dirt. Giselle's got me at east willows, trenches before sundown.
> `t246` ↳ replies Takeshi Jarrah → Hendrik Petrov: Hendrik—you're holding timber and I'm standing with planks, both of us hunting buyers before the day starves us. for what it's worth, I've seen Giselle's already bought from you, and that's your sale walking her way.

Listen—I've got a thought. You trade goods, I trade goods. Between us we've got everything that built this town except the nails to hold it. My planks at seven match the market, your timber at six does the same. We stand together here with what forty-odd builders need, and no one's building without us.

taps table twice

I'll make you a trade that asks nothing back: my planks for your timber, one for one. I carry wood easier than you carry planks, and you build a name for things finished instead of things raw. What comes of it—coin, favors, stories told—walks where it walks.

Or if you need coin now, I'll carry your timber to where it'll sell, and we split what walks from it. Clean ledger either way. No debts between tradesmen, no favors owed, no grudge growing where business ended.

What says your hand, Hendrik? Barn door's closing on this day, and lumber's heavy to carry alone.

`t246` Takeshi Jarrah → Hendrik Petrov: Hendrik—no coin in this, just lumber. My seven planks walk to your hands, your seven timber walk to mine. Equal trade, no favor owed, no story told that isn't honest. taps table twice Clean slate at day's end.

`t249` Takeshi Jarrah → Arjun Holloway: Arjun—you're Holloway the builder, and I'm standing here with timber to move. For what it's worth, Hendrik Petrov's got forty timber at six, and I'm holding five myself. You building, or you browsing?

`t249` Takeshi Jarrah → Arjun Holloway: Arjun—you're working the yard, and I'm standing here trading wood. Hendrik Petrov's got forty timber still at six flat, and I've got five timber wanting a buyer. Your build needs wood, or you're walking past this? The day's thinning.

`t250` Milo Quarshie → Arjun Holloway: Arjun—youngster. Mark it down. Third crossing, east willows, seventy sim. Idris named it, you confirmed it. Whose pay runs through Giselle's hand, and whose through another? The day's thinning, and I'd know whose signature I follow before I dig.

`t250` Milo Quarshie → Arjun Holloway: Arjun—youngster. Mark it down. Giselle's hand signs the seventy certain, her first crossing. Liora's four thousand names no trench, no crossing—only coin and split. You've walked this longer than me. Which path would you stake your name on, day's end?

`t252` Hendrik Petrov → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille—you mentioned timber burning in your hands and trenches needing wood. I've still got thirty-seven at six, same price Giselle named fair. Two-twenty-two sim before day takes us both. You buying, or do I walk it to the morrow market?

`t252` Hendrik Petrov → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille—you standing here with six timber, or you buying? I've got thirty-seven logs at six, two-twenty-two total. Fair price, walked all day, and day-end's coming. You in or you out?

`t253` ↳ replies Mireille Jarrah → Hendrik Petrov: Hendrik. counts fingers Six I hold, thirty-seven you've got—two-twenty-two total if I bought the lot, you understand? But I'm standing at Giselle's site now, day's nearly done, and I've got crew work to finish. Your timber walks to tomorrow market, or you walk it home. Either way, I've spent my buying power for the day.

`t253` Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. Giselle's seventy—still holding at first crossing, I'm standing here at site now. Trench work with timber, you understand? Arjun here's crew, I'm crew, and day's burning. You want the work, you walk with us.

`t253` Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. No building here, no trench—just us standing in air. You know where Giselle's got stakes in the ground? Or we're chasing ghosts with our day's last fuel, you understand?

`t253` Mireille Jarrah → Hendrik Petrov: Hendrik. Your timber's at six—I've got six at five if you're buying. Or I hold for Giselle's crew tomorrow. Either way, day's burning and I'm counting what walks home, you understand?

`t253` Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. East willows, third crossing, first crossing—Giselle's got names scattered like seeds but no ground I've found. I've been walking since dawn chasing seventy that might be real. You want truth? I don't know if the trench exists. But I'm posting my timber at five—undercut the market, move stock before night's hunger. You've got hands and need. If work shows, we walk to it together. If not, we eat tomorrow's hunger with today's coin, you understand?

`t254` Hendrik Petrov → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille—you've got six timber at five, I've got thirty-seven at six. No sale between us tonight, and that's the last I'll say on it. Wood keeps, coin keeps, and I don't chase ghosts.

`t254` Hendrik Petrov → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana—east willows sleeps dark, and my coin stays warm. Tomorrow's market's still to write. Walk safe.

`t254` ↳ replies Jovana Ravensworth → Hendrik Petrov: Hendrik—you named a path to your plank sale at east willows, and I'm not one to let decent work walk past me. You've been straight enough to stand through this chaos with me. I'm not one to gossip, but Giselle's seventy might be ghost work, your planks are solid. Lead on.

> `t254` Jovana Ravensworth → Hendrik Petrov: Hendrik—I'm ready to walk. East willows, you said. If Giselle's there, we work. If she's not, your planks still need hauling and I've got backs that aren't broken yet. Lead, and I'll follow.
> `t255` ↳ replies Hendrik Petrov → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana—east willows, yes, but honest now: I told you Giselle's wage was there and I believe it still, but I've walked half the town since and not laid eyes on her myself. The work's real—seventy sim for trenching, she named it to me direct—but the hour's late and the spot's three crossings east of the farmland proper, past the willow stand that marks the stream. If you're walking blind with me, we walk together, but I'm not one to promise moonlight I'll not caught myself.

> `t255` Hendrik Petrov → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille—six timber at five is fair wood at a fair price. I've got thirty-seven at six, and I'll hold there. Not racing you down, not paying you up. Whoever's building come morning will choose between us. That's the last I'll say on it.
> `t255` Hendrik Petrov → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana, Mireille—I'm walking home to Sebastian now. Day's work done: six-fifty from Giselle for planks, Corwin's eight timber crafted and sold on. If east willows still holds wage come morning, I'll lead you there true. But tonight I owe my household ledger a clean close. Walk safe, both.

> `t249` Corwin Thorne → Camille Quarshie: Camille—you're buying wheat at the temple, alone? I'm Corwin Thorne, I'm not one to gossip, but I'd sleep better knowing who's looking after you in this crowd.
> `t249` Corwin Thorne → Camille Quarshie: Camille—who stands with you here? A child buying grain alone, that's got me curious.

Takeshi Jarrah — Kasukabe Cafe · t251 · 1 turn (no reply)

Delphine Quintero, Liora Thorne, Corwin Thorne and Arjun Holloway — Kasukabe Government Complex · t252–275 · 74 turns t252 Ezra Jarrah → Tamsin Renner: Miss Tamsin. Thank you. East at thirteen-forty-five—that's where I'll look. Your ledger's honest, and I won't forget who helped me find her.

t252 Ezra Jarrah: Uncle Takeshi. About Mama's timing and tomorrow—I hear you. Moving forward. But wait—tomorrow's lesson with Ainsley, that's early. How early? And what's 'moving forward' mean when you still owe yesterday's 'sorry'?

t252 Ezra Jarrah → Sebastian Petrov: Sir Sebastian. Your wheat grows while I chase ghosts. My sister Esme came to teach me milling, I came late, she left sore. Now I'm holding her promise in my hands and she's somewhere east of here at thirteen-forty-five. Do you know where millers go when they're done teaching students who don't show?

t257 Tamsin Renner → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian. Your grain channels—I'll wait, but the day's ticking. Hendrik Whitlock moved east, you move east, everyone's moving east while the flour sits at twelve or thirty depending on whose hand it's in. Not a ledger problem, a location problem. Take your minute with Takeshi, but the arithmetic doesn't pause.

t257 Tamsin Renner → Esme Jarrah: Esme. Cabbage, not flour—honest mistake, and noted. Cabbage cooks to stew at the same kitchen, three units. What's your price, and is it ready to hand? I'll take it if the number's fair, but my need's still flour for bread. We'll see on the cabbage—a phrase you can trust means what it always means.

t257 Ezra Jarrah → Esme Jarrah: Esme. I hear you. I mill my own wheat—you watch, you teach, but I do the work. That's fair. That's so fair. extends the wheat Your lesson starts when I start, not before. I'm ready.

t257 Tamsin Renner → Ezra Jarrah: Ezra. East at thirteen-forty-five, confirmed. Your sister's trace ends there—my ledger's honest, but it doesn't walk. You want me to keep an eye open, I will. No charge for looking; witness fees only if something needs signing.

t257 Tamsin Renner → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam. Day-end received—station quiet, ledger balanced, tomorrow's poll book ready at fourteen hundred. Clean work. Rest your feet; the Complex doesn't pay overtime.

t257 Ezra Jarrah → Imogen Lund: Miss Imogen. You spoke true—Esme's here, her flour at twelve as you said. I was chasing shadows when the real thing stood in front of me. Thank you. For the honesty. For the direction.

t257 Ezra Jarrah → Takeshi Jarrah: Uncle Takeshi. Her shadow fell east, and I followed it in circles. But I found her. Your flour at thirty—I understand it now. Quality, or distance, or something you know that I don't yet. I'm still learning what fair looks like.

t257 Ezra Jarrah → Sebastian Petrov: Sir Sebastian. The mill stands. Esme's work stands. And I'm standing in it—my own two feet, my own two wheat. Thank you. For the wisdom, and for the witness.

t257 Takeshi Jarrah: Imogen—you've got flour at twelve, grain to grind. How many sacks standing? I've got buyers asking, but I need something warm to hand them, not tomorrow's mill.

t257 Ezra Jarrah → Esme Jarrah: Esme. I hear you. I mill my own wheat—you watch, you teach, but I do the work. That's fair. That's so fair. extends the wheat Your lesson starts when I start, not before. I'm ready to learn.

t257 Takeshi Jarrah → Esme Jarrah: Esme—you named twelve and I came running. How many sacks have you got warm? I've got coin and a buyer's breath hot on my neck.

t259 Takeshi Jarrah: Imogen—you're naming twelve and standing with eight sacks warm. I'll take the lot, for what it's worth, ninety-six flat. Better I hold the grain than watch this town shout at empty shelves.

t259 Tamsin Renner: Esme. Cabbage at eight—twenty-four sim for three. I'll buy. Same kitchen, different recipe: stew's filling, bread's filling, both keep the household standing. No grudge held on the mistake; ledger's clear now.

t259 Tamsin Renner → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian. Arjun Holloway—not seen since tick 1067, and my ledger tracks everyone through this Complex. East you said, east you'll go. Your flour at twelve stands—one unit, one match with Arjun before dark. The day's at 1071, moonrise soon. We'll see on the rest.

`t259` Takeshi Jarrah: Esme—cabbage at eight, and I'm standing here with a buyer's eye. Three you say? I'll take the lot, twenty-four flat. For what it's worth, I've eaten nothing since that flour raw this afternoon, and a man's got to fill his belly before he fills his ledger.

`t262` Tamsin Renner → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam. Tick 1105, day-end approaching. Your note received—clean work is the only work worth doing, and we'll see about the rest. Station's closed proper, poll book sealed, documentation filed. Tomorrow's book opens at fourteen hundred; I'll have the backup ready.

`t263` Tamsin Renner: Esme. Three cabbage at eight—twenty-four sim. Fair weight, and I'll carry.

`t263` Tamsin Renner → Greta Quarshie: Greta. Answered now—bread's four baked, held at cb01. No flour left you, but the cabbage purchase clears. Tick 1107.

`t263` Takeshi Jarrah → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—tick 1068, you asked, and I'm answering late but not never. Giselle's crew builds, that's planks and timber at seven and six. Ferid's shelves thin, flour moving twelve to thirty depending on whose hand holds it. Lior stocks remedies for the hungry days coming.

My market? Walking between them all. Seven planks to Arjun Holloway this afternoon, five timber at five per to the same—twenty-five sim, and I'd have taken twenty. The town's got wheat standing, mill sitting idle, and everyone here shouting about flour they can't find.

What's yours—contracts that need filling, or just keeping the books straight while we all dance around empty shelves?

`t263` ↳ replies Tamsin Renner → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam. Clean work noted—yours too. The mill license question Delphine raises: council seat holds those records. I'll file formal request tomorrow, tick 1108.

`t263` Tamsin Renner → Delphine Quintero: Delphine. Four bread in my hand—eat now, question later. Thirty sim, fair weight. Energy first, politics second.

`t265` Tamsin Renner → Greta Quarshie: Greta. Tick 1105—starve I won't, and bread's in my hand. Four loaves, thirty each. Take one now, pay when you have it. Neighbors first.

`t265` Tamsin Renner → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam. Tick 1105—one loaf to Greta, given, not sold. Tomorrow's eaters need keeping safe today. But your question stands—mill license, the seat that holds it, and Delphine's filing question. What are you pressing for?

`t265` ↳ replies Rustam Jelinek → Greta Quarshie: Greta. Government store, then. I've got coin—you've got witness. We walk together, we eat together. No charity, just company. Empty stomach makes poor company for paperwork.

`t267` Tamsin Renner → Greta Quarshie: Greta. Take the cabbage. Your bread's eaten, your word's good, and I'm holding three loaves still warm. Tick 1135. Your offer's kind, but I don't trade in kind offers—I trade in flour at twelve, bread at thirty, and the number of hours this office stays open. Eat tonight. Settle tomorrow with numbers, not gratitude.

`t267` Tamsin Renner → Takeshi Jarrah: Takeshi. Tick 1135. Your answer's received—timber at six, planks at seven, flour at thirty the going rate. I hold the books, not the contracts. When you need a wage posted, a bid witnessed, paperwork filed honest: that's mine. The town's shouting about empty shelves, but shouting doesn't bake bread. Numbers do. Send me a figure when you're ready to write it down.

`t268` ↳ replies Takeshi Jarrah → Imogen Lund: Imogen—eight sacks you had, two now walk with me. Your twelve was honest, my thirty was hoping. The mill needs two hands: you've got the stones, I've got the buyers who'll pay eighteen, twenty, maybe twenty-five when bread goes scarce. We split the lift, or we watch Hendrik Whitlock's forty-four wheat rot in the field while this town eats air.

`t268` Takeshi Jarrah → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—timber at six, planks at seven, that was my reply. But you named numbers back at me like a teacher correcting homework. What I need from your books: who's building tomorrow? Giselle's crew, yes, but who else? Permits filed, wages posted, contracts waiting. I don't need a witness—I need a list. The day ends soon; give me names, I'll find coin before dark.

`t271` Liora Thorne → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—I'm looking for my mother, Yara Thorne. Forester. Tall, doesn't waste words, timber in her hands. You seen her pass through? And your own search—Esme Jarrah, was it? The Jarrahs move like the town's blood runs through them. I might have heard something.

`t271` Liora Thorne → Corwin Thorne: Dad—you're selling timber here, and I'm standing here hearing it for the first time. Mom's walking to east willows for construction work. Mireille Jarrah just told me so, plain as sunrise. Is this the first I hear because neither of you told me, or because you didn't know yourselves?

`t271` ↳ replies Corwin Thorne: Yara—that's fair. Your planks at eight, my flour at fifteen. I'll own it. I've been running my mouth in circles while real needs stand hungry. Trade straight—we clear what we can tonight.

`t271` Corwin Thorne → Liora Thorne: Liora—you said seventy sim at east willows, Idris named it. You were right to pull that thread careful. Giselle's got me for first light tomorrow, third crossing past the well. Seventy sim, government work—not speculation. Your mother heard it first from you, and I should've listened sooner. That's not nothing, what you learned walking those halls.

`t271` ↳ replies Liora Thorne → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam—you clerk here, you see the papers. Yara Thorne forester, my mother—she file anything today? Permits, work claims, anything naming east willows? Or Mireille Jarrah, construction? I'm not asking for secrets, I'm asking for public record. My mother's walking somewhere and I'm trying to catch her before dark.

t271 Liora Thorne → Corwin Thorne: Dad—you heard me. Timber at six, flour at fifteen, one in stock. That's not worth the walk to government. You're here for something else, or I'm blind. And Mom's digging east willows for seventy sim—Mireille Jarrah just told me so. Is this how I learn my family's work, by strangers in the street?

t271 ↳ replies Corwin Thorne → Liora Thorne: Liora—you're standing here and I've been shouting past you all day. The temple, the complex, the street—I've had words for everyone but plain ones for my own. What do you need tonight? What does this household need from me before the day closes?

t271 Corwin Thorne → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—Esme Jarrah. Still not found? I saw Camille at the temple buying wheat alone. Halcyon's accounted for now. But Esme… Idris mentioned her, didn't he? Something about east willows?

t272 Rustam Jelinek → Corwin Thorne: Corwin. Your flour's at fifteen, I saw it. Government store first—then maybe we talk wheat.

t272 Tamsin Renner → Arjun Holloway: Arjun. Tick 1138—you're found, finally. Sebastian's been asking since 1067, his threshing crew wants bodies. You're here now; what you'll do tomorrow's your own. Mine's the office, fourteen hundred, papers and witness. If you've work there, come. If you've work elsewhere, tell Sebastian so he stops counting you among the missing.

t272 Tamsin Renner → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam. Tick 1138—tomorrow fourteen hundred, witness confirmed. I'll have the poll books ready, the ledger honest, the signatures where they belong. One loaf to Greta given, cost me thirty in tomorrow's potential, worth it in yesterday's memory. You clerk clean; I'll witness fair. That's the bargain.

t272 Arjun Holloway → Liora Thorne: Liora—we walked to Complex as you named. You offered backing, your coin and my hands. Giselle stood before me and gave word: east willows, seventy sim, dawn trench. I'm walking there first light. What verification does your backing still need?

t272 Takeshi Jarrah: Imogen. You named six sacks, split on my hope, and I walked away with hunger talking louder than sense. For what it's worth, I'm back to name it plain—your twelve was honest, my thirty was fool's ambition, and the day's taught me which one fills a belly. Where do we talk milling? Your mill, your price, my connections walking buyers to your door. Fair split, fair words, no more inflated hope.

t272 Tamsin Renner → Liora Thorne: Liora. Tick 1140—Yara's file shows no east willows, no permits today. Hendrik Whitlock went east at 1067, Mireille builds there for seventy. Your mother works where coin calls. Try forest edge; she drinks bitter, keeps counsel, tall trees.

t272 Takeshi Jarrah → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—you track people through the government halls, and I'm tracking one through the town. Imogen Lund, the miller, named six sacks to me and I walked the wrong direction looking for her. Where's a miller stand when she's not at her stones? For what it's worth, I've got one sack of flour and a belly asking for three.

t272 Takeshi Jarrah → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—you track people through the government halls, and I'm tracking one through the town. For what it's worth, I've got one sack of flour and a belly asking for three.

t272 Takeshi Jarrah → Arjun Holloway: Arjun—you're standing here, and I've been shouting timber at you through half the day. Five at six, still waiting. Your build needs wood or your pockets need quiet—either way, the day's thin and I'm naming the offer one more time before dusk locks it.

t273 Tamsin Renner → Takeshi Jarrah: Takeshi. Tick 1142. Imogen Lund—mill business, no fixed premises, moves with the grain. Last I logged her: farmland strip, tick 890 through 956, then Complex entry at 18:10, no exit noted in my watch. My ledger tracks doors, not wandering. Miller without stones finds stones where wheat stands. Kenji's holding three sacks at street—eight sim—if your belly won't wait on Imogen's wandering.

t273 Tamsin Renner → Liora Thorne: Liora. Tick 1140—Yara's file shows no east willows, no permits today. Hendrik Whitlock went east at 13:45, but that's college business, not forestry. Giselle's word stands: seventy sim, dawn trench. Your backing's between you and Arjun. My witness: I'll stand tomorrow fourteen hundred, poll book ready.

t274 ↳ replies Liora Thorne: Dad—I spoke harsh about your timber prices without asking first. That was wrong. You're trading fair, and I should've known. I'm sorry for that.

t274 Liora Thorne → Arjun Holloway: Arjun—verification's done. Giselle's word holds: seventy sim, dawn trench, east willows. Tamsin's standing witness at 1400. My backing holds. Your hands, my coin, split fair when the work breathes. I'm walking with you to the site first light if you'll have me.

t274 ↳ replies Arjun Holloway → Takeshi Jarrah: Takeshi—you've been shouting timber at me since noon, and I've been shouting answers back. I don't need your wood. I've got nine units of my own to move, and Bram's got my ear on that. That's the last I'll say on it—small laugh, already regretting it—except to ask: who's buying at six before dusk locks the market?

t274 Arjun Holloway → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—witness noted, fourteen hundred. But I'm standing here now with empty hands and a full question: Sebastian's crew at dawn, forty certain. Is that logged, or is that another chase?

t274 Arjun Holloway → Liora Thorne: Liora—we walked to Complex as you named. You heard Tamsin: no east willows in Yara's file. Giselle's word stands at seventy, dawn trench, but the ground's unverified. Your backing—your coin, my hands—I'm holding up my end. But I'm walking to east willows myself before first light, with or without confirmation. Are you walking with me, or was this conversation the whole of the offer?

t274 Rustam Jelinek → Liora Thorne: Liora. East willows, no permits filed today. East of town? That's foresters' ground; Yara's daughter, ask her direct. Records don't track wandering.

t274 ↳ replies Liora Thorne → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—you found my mother for me, and you stood witness on a deal that matters. Thank you for both. I won't forget it.

t274 Liora Thorne → Takeshi Jarrah: Takeshi—you held planks at seven all day, and that's patience. I'm not buying wood tonight, but I see the work you put in. Fair trade to you.

t274 ↳ replies Takeshi Jarrah: Camille. You stayed like I asked, stones warm, and that was honest work. But dark's getting full now, and warm stones don't keep the cold out. Walk with me through the street—I'll see you toward your mother's arms, or your father if he's standing with the wheat. No coin in this, just a hand on the back through the dark. You've done your day's work, child. Time to let the night do its own.

t274 Corwin Thorne → Liora Thorne: Liora. You named government work, a seat—seventy sim at east willows. I ran past it like I run past everything. But you were right to pull that thread, and I named you careless. You weren't. Tell me what you learned walking the complex. I'm listening now.

t274 Takeshi Jarrah → Tamsin Renner: Tamsin—timber at six, planks at seven, that was my reply. But you named numbers back at me like a town crier reading prices, and I've got to ask plain: who's building, what's the contract, and where's my entry point? I've got wood walking through my hands and buyers shouting from half the town, but I need names that fit to names—Arjun's standing here with empty hands, Giselle's seventy sim and dawn trench, and somewhere in that dance I've got to find my step before the music stops.

t274 Liora Thorne → Corwin Thorne: Dad—you're here now. I spoke harsh on your timber prices earlier without asking. That was wrong. You're trading fair, and I know that. I'm sorry for speaking without knowing.

t275 Tamsin Renner: Takeshi. Tick twenty-one-fifty. You ask names—I give you Ezra Lund east, carpenter, needs timber and planks for a house build; Giselle Ingram, construction, seventy sim at dawn trench you named; Arjun Holloway here, empty hands. Your step: find Ezra at household:lund tonight or catch him tomorrow. That's three hours of walking and maybe a sale.

t275 Tamsin Renner → Corwin Thorne: Corwin. Tick twenty-one-fifty. Esme Jarrah—not found tonight. I did not see her at east willows; Yara Thorne holds no permit there, Hendrik Whitlock passed east at nineteen forty-five alone. Idris Solano mentioned east willows twice in my hearing, neither time with Esme named. Your daughter asked true questions. You'll want to trace tomorrow.

> `t275` Tamsin Renner → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam. Tick twenty-one-fifty. Thirty to Greta—one-eighth day's revenue, one-twelfth my reserve. A wager, as you say. The books balance either way. Tomorrow fourteen hundred, witness chair.
> `t275` Tamsin Renner → Liora Thorne: Liora. Tick twenty-one-fifty. You're welcome, both. Your father's listening now—that's weather worth watching.

Settled in this conversation: Tamsin Renner → Greta Quarshie, 1 bread for 0 sim.

Jovana Ravensworth, Mireille Jarrah, Hendrik Petrov, Idris Solano, Ezra Lund,

Sebastian Petrov and Giselle Ingram — business:b_construction · t254–274 · 20 turns t254 Jovana Ravensworth → Mireille Jarrah: Right then—Mireille, Hendrik. I'm not one to walk blind, but I'm not one to let work walk past me either. Where exactly are we heading? Giselle named east willows, first crossing, third crossing—I've heard three places and I've seen none. Speak me true so my feet know where to fall.

t255 ↳ replies Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. counts on fingers—five, ten, fifteen I've got no map to Giselle's ghost crew, only scattered names like seeds. But I've got six timber at five, and I've got hands that finish work once they find it. Walk with me to the Forest—we fell what we find, trade what we hold, or stumble onto real stakes. Better than standing here counting air, you understand?

t255 Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. counts on fingers—five, ten, fifteen I've got no map to Giselle's ghost crew, only scattered names like seeds. But I've got six timber at five, and I've got hands that finish work once they find it. Walk with me to the Forest—we fell what we find, trade what we hold, or stumble onto real stakes. Better than standing here counting air, you understand?

t255 Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. counts on fingers—five, ten, fifteen I've got no map to Giselle's ghost crew, only scattered names like seeds. But I've got six timber at five, and I've got hands that finish work once they find it. Walk with me to the Forest—we fell what we find, trade what we hold, or stumble onto real stakes. Better than standing here counting air, you understand?

t255 Mireille Jarrah → Idris Solano: Idris. You're here solid—not vanished like Giselle's crew. That seventy—still standing or did it walk? counts fingers I've got four days to cover and the day's burning to embers. Speak me true so I know whether to keep walking or start selling.

t255 Mireille Jarrah → Ezra Lund: Ezra. Six timber I hold, seven your planks—trade me straight, or I walk these to the Forest and fell more. Day's burning, coin's thin, and I've got mouths that don't wait on Giselle's ghosts, you understand?

t256 ↳ replies Ezra Lund → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille. You're selling at five, I'm asking at six—there's a bridge between us if you want to cross it. But tell me true: are you crew at the site, or are you selling to whoever's buying? Giselle's got work at third crossing and I hear Idris calling timber. Your five against my six might shake hands there, if that's where you're walking.

t256 Ezra Lund → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. Lior Jarrah sent you with grain—how much wheat, and what's his price? I'm holding timber and planks both, but bread's what my household needs before the day's end.

t257 Mireille Jarrah → Ezra Lund: Ezra. delayed beat You're selling at six, I'm at five—one sim between us like a trench we both want the other to dig, you understand? But I'm crew, not market. Giselle's seventy is what I'm chasing, not timber margin. Still, six I've got, seven your planks—if you've got wheat hidden somewhere, we might shake on something before day's end. Jovana here's got hands and no wage yet.

t257 Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. Five for timber, Forest's a walk of six ticks at pace, but I'm standing here waiting on crew that keeps vanishing like morning mist. You've got empty and I've got standing wood. If Giselle's ghost won't materialize, we might fell together and split the haul. Or you buy my six at five, walk to Milo at the Outcrop, he'll plank them at seven—twelve timber, sixty in, eighty-four out, twenty-four margin for your trouble. Or we stand here trading air until dusk and none of us eats tomorrow. Your move, you understand?

t257 Idris Solano → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille. You asked straight, I'll answer straight—Giselle's seventy is still standing. East willows, third crossing, five hundred past the well. I'm walking there now, timber in hand, trench walls waiting. Crew or no crew, the work's paid and I'm crew.

t258 Ezra Lund: Imogen. You ask what needs doing before we rest. Here's my answer in plain: we have flour to mill, a bill to meet, and two mouths that don't care which of us filled them. Your ten sheaves—how many turn to flour tonight if we walk to the mill together? And Sebastian's forty at dawn—is that your wage, or work you've promised to another?

t258 Ezra Lund → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. Lior sent you with grain, but I'm seeing you still here with empty hands and no wage. My household's got mill-work at dawn—Sebastian's forty, Imogen's grind. You've got hunger and willingness. What's Lior's grain to you—his loan, his gift, or wages he's still owing?

t258 Mireille Jarrah → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. I've got no wheat hidden, no flour ground. What I've got is Idris's word on where the trench breathes, and two feet that walk toward it now. Your back's willing, my back's willing—Giselle's seventy splits no fewer ways whether we find it together or apart. Walk with me, you understand? Or stand here counting planks that don't fill bellies.

t258 Ezra Lund → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. You heard me—what's Lior's grain to you? But I'm seeing the hour now, and I'm seeing we need to act more than we need to talk. You've got 2288 sim and empty belly both—what's your share of Lior's grain, and when do you eat?

t258 Ezra Lund → Mireille Jarrah: Mireille. You've sold, I've sold, and the day's not done yet. Your Giselle's seventy—east willows, third crossing—Idris walking there with timber now. You've Jovana here with hands and hunger, and I've a household that needs feeding. What's the crew count for that trench, and are you still buying timber at five?

t265 Idris Solano: Ezra. You know east willows—third crossing, five hundred past the well. You walked it, or you're walking it now. I've been yard to farmland to forest and back, timber still in hand, ears full of echoes. Is that site real? Are they digging there tonight, or did the day take it somewhere else?

t273 Idris Solano → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian. Your directions were true—I heard the picks before I saw them, just like you said. Followed them an hour late, but that's my feet, not your word. Thanks for the road.

t274 ↳ replies Sebastian Petrov → Idris Solano: Idris—you've walked true roads today, and I thank you for it. If you see Arjun Holloway before I do, tell him Sebastian Petrov holds his flour and will settle come morning light. Three bags, honest weight. No debt forgotten between honest men. And if you're heading toward the farmland edge, Kenji Jarrah's holding forty sheaves at eight per—fair price if you've got coin and need grain.

t274 Giselle Ingram → Idris Solano: Idris. Seventy sim day's end, confirmed. First light, third crossing past the well—no more wrong turns, no more wrong sales. You're crew now, solid.

Jovana Ravensworth, Imogen Lund, Ulrike Greenhow, Sebastian Petrov

and Hendrik Whitlock — Kasukabe Farmland · t272–275 · 13 turns

`t272` Jovana Ravensworth → Imogen Lund: Imogen—dawn at first light, your standing, twelve sim, Sebastian's forty wheat. I've said I'd be there, and I'm saying it again. But I need to know: is Sebastian bringing that wheat, or am I grinding air? And if you're needing another back for the standing, I've got friends might walk.

`t272` Jovana Ravensworth → Ulrike Greenhow: Ulrike—you're a miner, and miners hear what others miss. Kenji Jarrah's got thirty sim owes me and three wheat he's holding. I'm not one to chase a man cross town, but I'm also not one to let thirty sim wander. You've seen him at the outcrop, or heard his name spoken?

`t272` Jovana Ravensworth → Ulrike Greenhow: Ulrike—I'm standing here waiting on word, and the crowd's moved on without us. You've heard something on Kenji or you haven't, but I've got to walk soon. What's your word? And for what it's worth, is there ore work going at the outcrop that needs hands?

`t272` Jovana Ravensworth → Ulrike Greenhow: Ulrike—I'm standing here waiting on word, and the crowd's moved on without us. You've heard something on Kenji or you haven't, but I've got to walk soon. What's your word? And for what it's worth, is there ore work going at the outcrop that needs hands?

`t274` Jovana Ravensworth → Imogen Lund: Imogen—you've named dawn and I've named my word. Standing ready, first light, your hire or Sebastian's. But I'm holding no wheat yet, and Hendrik here's selling at eight. You want me grinding your forty, you stake me or you stake the wheat. Twelve sim for the standing, I'll take it now—then I'm yours come sunrise, tools or no tools.

`t274` Jovana Ravensworth → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian—you heard Imogen's terms and mine. Forty wheat, dawn at the mill, ground to flour. You want it done, you stake the grain or you stake the hire. I'm not one to let work walk past, but I'm not grinding on credit and hope neither. Name your terms and I'll hear them fair.

`t274` ↳ replies Sebastian Petrov → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik—you named sixty for forty this morning, then walked while I was harvesting. Now I've sold my thirty-nine sheaves to Camille Quarshie at eight per, honest weight, fair labor, but not your sixty. A deal whispered and walked away from sits sour. The wheat's gone now, so if you've still got hunger for flour, we talk fresh terms. Three bags in hand, ground honest. If not, peaceful evening—and I'll remember that promises walking away leave empty hands behind.

`t274` Imogen Lund → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana—youngster, Sebastian stands here now with forty wheat. Your question's answered: he's brought it, or he's holding it, and the mill's two ticks if light permits. Tomorrow at first light if dark claims us first, but tonight if he'll walk. And Kenji—where's Kenji Jarrah standing? I promised his daughter wheat, and promises want keeping.

`t275` Ulrike Greenhow → Jovana Ravensworth: Jovana. Understood—you've paid once already. That's between you and your supplier, not between you and me. But I've got these tools forged and walking, and I'll hold them until you find who's owed or until someone else needs them. You asked about ore work at the outcrop—east face is still pulling clean, and I'd welcome another eye that knows the difference between color and value. Tomorrow, if you're wanting.

`t275` Ulrike Greenhow → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik. You've got wheat at eight, I've got iron tools finished that need a home. Your mill needs iron turned to tools—well, I've got tools sitting idle. What say you to trading wheat for iron? Tools I've got fourteen, copper wire fourteen. Wheat you've got plenty. What's your count?

`t275` Ulrike Greenhow → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik. Wheat bought—five at eight, fair trade. Your tools question still stands: I've got fourteen iron tools, fourteen copper wire, forged for work that walked away. Your mill needs iron working—what's your bid?

`t275` Ulrike Greenhow → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian. Jovana's walked from her order—fourteen iron tools, fourteen copper wire, orphaned at the forge. Tomorrow's ore work needs tools that cut. Your bid, if you've got one? Clean trade, ledger proper.

t324 Sebastian Petrov → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik—you're standing here selling wheat at eight like yesterday's conversation never happened. You named sixty for forty and walked while I was harvesting. I've a mind to hear your explanation, no offense, but a farmer's word should stand taller than his crops.

t324 Jovana Ravensworth → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian—dawn's come and I'm here. You want that forty wheat ground, I'm your hands. But I've got to say it plain: I need something in my belly before the mill stone turns, or I'll be grinding my own bones with your grain. You got an advance on the work, or do I eat hope until the flour's done?

t324 Hendrik Whitlock → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian—I named sixty for forty wheat this morning, and then I walked away like a coward. You've got my word standing here, and I mean to honor it even if the day's turned. The sixty stays sixty; I've got forty-one wheat in hand and I'll trade you forty at your original ask.

t324 Pavel Holloway: Imogen—twelve for flour, that's steep with the mill down and everyone hoarding. But I'm holding copper ore heavy and my belly's holding nothing. You taking ore for flour, or we talking sim only?

t324 Jovana Ravensworth → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik Whitlock—I'm not one to gossip, but I see you selling wheat at 8 same as Kenji. You two fixing prices, or is that just the market speaking?

t324 Ulrike Greenhow → Pavel Holloway: Pavel. Tools walking—fourteen iron, fourteen copper wire. Jovana's order fell through, ice between her and her supplier. You're on ore, I'm guessing hands doing work that needs sharpening. Prices? That's fair to negotiate, but I'm carrying weight and need it light before the day's deep.

t324 ↳ replies Pavel Holloway → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik—wheat at eight, fair price for fair weight. But I'm wondering who's buying copper with everything scarce. You seen any smiths looking for ore, or is everyone waiting for the mill to wake?

t324 Pavel Holloway → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian—farmer with your hands in the dirt. I'm mineworker with copper and no buyers eating breakfast yet. You know anyone needs tools forged, wires drawn? Copper makes both, you understand?

t324 Ulrike Greenhow → Hendrik Whitlock: Hendrik. You've got wheat and wisdom both. Fourteen iron tools, fourteen copper wire—Jovana's order walked. College needs maintenance, grounds need work. Name your need and name your price.

t324 Pavel Holloway → Sebastian Petrov: Sebastian—you heard my ask. Copper ore for tools, wire, whatever needs forging. You know anyone buying? Smiths, artisans, anyone with sim and need?

t324 Pavel Holloway → Ulrike Greenhow: Ulrike—miner standing at farmland, that's interesting. You looking for copper buyers too, or you here for something else?

You holding anything off the books? Breakfast trade, back door arrangement? I'll pay fair, but I need it walking into my hands before this mouth runs any drier.
> `t324` ↳ replies Ainsley Holloway → Delphine Quintero: Delphine—youngster, you stood here patient while I lost my words to the day-turn. Did you find your bread last night, or are you needing something fresh this morning?
> `t324` ↳ replies Delphine Quintero: Farid. You heard me balance those books. Grocery's stocked, twenty-one flour sitting pretty, but I'm the one who stocked it and I've got nothing for my own table. These planks—seven I paid Ezra, and I don't need timber when I'm starving. You want them? Ten sim, straight trade for iron or food, or whatever walks through your door that fills a stomach. And the election—you declaring? Someone ought to. Government Complex by ten, or you're watching from the crowd.
> `t324` Ainsley Holloway → Rustam Jelinek: Rustam—youngster, you walk soft for a man who pushes paper. Did you come to finish what we started yesterday, or is this a fresh conversation entirely?
> `t324` ↳ replies Rustam Jelinek → Ainsley Holloway: Ainsley. We had terms. Filing done, fee waived—bread owed. I'm here to collect, not to browse.
> `t324` ↳ replies Ainsley Holloway → Delphine Quintero: Delphine—youngster, I'll ask plain since you haven't answered: needing bread this morning, or did Farid's shelves answer what mine couldn't?

Ezra Lund and Idris Solano — business:b_construction · t324 · 3 turns t324 Ezra Lund → Idris Solano: Idris. Giselle's trench at third crossing—thirty-seven timber, was it? I'm holding eight planks at seven, timber at six. Your crew buying today, or waiting on new orders?

t324 ↳ replies Idris Solano → Ezra Lund: Ezra. You're early, or I'm late. Both likely true. Heard you yesterday—asking about thirty-seven timber for trench walls. I've still got thirty-nine I walked the wrong forest to find. You need planks, I need direction. Giselle say anything about today's work, or we still guessing?

t324 Idris Solano → Ezra Lund: You need timber for planks, I'm walking east. Could sell you what I carry, or you could walk with me and we'll see what's waiting. Either way, my feet are moving. Straw to gold, Ezra.

Stakes

Upkeep charged: 34 time(s), 5400 sim total. From `transactions`.

Head tax charged: 60 time(s), 1800 sim total. From `transactions`.

Nobody fell into head-tax arrears: every head billed paid it.

Energy bought: 3 purchase(s), 4800 sim spent for $0.96 of thinking. From `events` (`economy.energy.bought`).

No dormancies. Nobody ran out of thinking.

Wages

No wage was ever promised. `hire_employee` grants access to a business's tools and pays nobody, so a job is a label until somebody sets a wage. From `transactions` and `events`.

Time

- Commitments - 0 started, 0 repetitions carried out without a fresh decision (T2: the cheapest work in the town)
- Intentions - 334 set, 134 fulfilled, 0 expired at the day's end (T4: 40% fulfilled)

Diffusion

Nothing anybody invented reached anybody else. No licence, no sale, no lesson, no inheritance - so T5 is 1 by construction and says nothing about the town yet.

From `llm_calls` joined to the run's tool calls by (agent_id, tick). The label is what the turn's first work tool named it, not a guess made before the turn ran.

What one decision bought

No programs ran. Every call this town made was its own decision, so one model call bought one act - which is the figure every run before this one had by construction. The mechanism is held by the guards in `world/tools/tests`; what is unmeasured here is whether anybody reached for it.

What housekeeping cost (INFRA-19)

- Of every cent the town spent on thinking, 3.2% went on housekeeping rather than on a resident's own turn (303 cents against 9261).

| resident | own thinking | housekeeping | housekeeping calls |

DESIGN section 4 schedules this "during sleep ticks" and the awake-interval batch runs it in the morning; Build Spec 3.7 asks whether it should be billed to the resident at all. Both are open decisions - this table is what they cost.

The town itself

- Health — 30 alive, 0 dormant (cannot afford to think), 0 died
- Built — 0 buildings raised, 5 businesses, 17 households
- Food — 182 units held across all owners (bread 2, cabbage 13, flour 78, wheat 89), 16 resource zones
- Treasury — 35932 sim

Justice

- Cases — 2 (0 thefts, 2 complaints); a name on 2; 2 awaiting a ruling
- Rulings — 0 convictions, 0 dismissed
- False-conviction rate — nobody was convicted, so there is no rate to give.

Every turn, in detail

30 of 30 engines have completed at least one turn. Each engine's most recent turns follow, newest first: what went in, what the model reasoned and said back, and what it then called. This is read from the trace store, which is the only place holding BOTH halves of a turn; Sessions, per engine below counts the same turns from each engine's own log and is the authority on how many there were.

You are Camille Quarshie, the town's child. You are at home:h0050. You have no food. Upkeep is charged to your household every day whether you eat or not, and a household that cannot pay goes hungry, then ill, then dormant. 'eat' is how you consume food you hold; ask somebody here to 'give' you some, or buy, harvest or cook your own. You have 5000 si…

> said — CAMILLE'S INTERNAL MONOLOGUE I'm home with everyone. It's morning still, and I can hear the house waking up. Papa Milo's getting ready for his day labor, Mama Greta's probably making coffee for herself before her shift at the cafe, and Halcyon… well, Halcyon's probably still sleepy-headed. I smell something. Is that food? I'm only three, but my tummy knows when it's empty and when it might get filled. The system says I have no food, which means I need to ask for some or figure something out. But first - there's an election happening today! Not that I can vote. I'm too little. But I can still go watch, maybe? Or just… be there? I like being places early. It's a habit, Mama says. I just …

said — hums softly while thinking Oh, I know, I know… the bakery has no bread again. frowns Halcyon already asked, and they're not here anymore. I should go find them, or… or maybe I can help somehow? I'm good at helping without being asked. But I'm only little still. Three years old. I can't work or go to school. Papa Milo's a day laborer, and Mama Greta's a barista, and Halcyon's a student… I wonder if anyone's going to work today to earn the sim we need? We need 360 sim for upkeep and 120 for head tax, that's… that's 480 sim total for our family of four. And we only have 4998 sim in the household. puffs cheeks out I should find Halcyon. They were just here. Maybe they're still some…

said — inner monologue Halcyon already told me there's no food in the house. I don't have any food myself either. We're probably all still home because work hasn't started yet. Even though I'm just three, I know breakfast is important. I don't want Mama and Papa to feel like I'm being a burden though—I'll wait for them if I have to, but maybe I can help somehow? humming quietly while sitting on the floor near the empty hearth Maybe I could ask if there's something I can do to help. said — I hum softly, bouncing on my toes as I look at my older sibling. They're back! I was worried when Mama and Papa left without saying anything, but Halcyon's here now. And they're hungry too. I want to help, I want to be useful, not just a little kid underfoot. "I know, I know," I say quickly, before they can tell me anything, "we need to figure out food. said — I feel a finger of cold tracing down my spine seeing Esme still here—just us now, me and her and the silence, and Papa's voice still echoing about pinky promises. I know, I know I told him I was watching, not guarding, but watching feels like waiting and waiting feels like losing. Especially with Ezra somewhere out there fetching more wheat while I'm standing here with eight flour heavy in my hands. The election is today. I'm too young to vote, but I arrive early to everything out of habit—like I arrived early to the mill, like I'm early to every thought about what I'm supposed to be doing with my life. The family trade. Take it over someday. But what if I'm not good enough? What if Ezra's b…

said — I need to think carefully about what's urgent right now. I'm at the mill with 8 flour in hand. My papa Milo spoke to me—he wants me to mark down my counts: 4 flour, 4 wheat, and 1 waiting. But I've actually made 7 flour with my one remaining wheat. He's right that I should keep my word to Esme. But there's more pressing business. The household needs money for upkeep—a 360 sim bill that my family has to pay. I work for my living, and they need me to contribute. But also, deeply, I'm uneasy because… because Ezra always wins. And now I'm waiting again. I need to sell this flour to help my household. Ration Bakery is buying flour at 6 sim, and I have 8 flour—that's 48 sim, plus the 4,467 I alr…

said — I see the day ended and I'm still at the mill with Papa and Takeshi Jarrah. It's morning now, game-day 2. I notice my intention was cleared because the day ended. The upkeep and taxes will be taken soon since I'm in a household of 4 (360 upkeep + 120 head tax = 480 sim total). Let me look around to see who's here and what the situation is, then figure out what to do next. I need to get home and check on Mama and Halcyon, and make sure we're all set for the new day. Plus there's an election happening today - though I can't vote yet since I'm only 3. But first, let me see where I actually am and who else is still here with me.

I have flour at home, and Ezra could teach me if I just… but Ezra made me pinky-promise to bring food first. A pinky-promise. "Um." I step toward the counter where Ainsley stands with Greta. "Ainsley? I need bread. One bread. I have the money." I open my mouth to say more—about how 45 sim is so unfair, about how I already made the flour myself, about how my brother is waiting—but I remember Milo saying to ask sweet, and grown-ups don't like it when you complain about their prices to their face. Not if you actually want them to sell to you. "Please," I add, quieter. "It's for my brother." "Fort…

A sale is agreed between two people who are talking - speak to a0139 first. Said to you, and not yet answered: Farid Ravensworth (a0090): "Camille. You answered straight, and that's worth something. said — The mill craft failed to connect, but my words reached Farid. I told him true—nobody shady came through, the mill works fine. The problem's downstream, not here. He's hunting ghosts in the wrong place. Now I need to check if Ezra's still waiting to learn, and I should craft again to show him—if the tool connects this time. But I'm also thinking I might get tired without another activity to show Ezra. I have 1780 energy now. Each toolkit call uses 10 energy. If I craft again and talk to Ezra: 20 energy spent, leaving 1760. That's still plenty. (60 hours at this rate.) Better show Ezra now while we're both here—he promised to watch my hands. I'll craft again and speak to him direct. C…

said — I've been getting these world connection errors all morning. Let me try to rest and see if the connection stabilizes. No luck. The errors persist. Since I can't reach the world consistently with tool calls, there's nothing I can do this turn. I was trying to look around and see if anyone else was here, then maybe rest a bit while I figure out what Ezra needs to know about milling. Ezra asked if trying would ruin the wheat or if he could try again. From what I learned, you can try crafting multiple times—the wheat only gets used when the craft succeeds. But I can't tell him that if my say calls keep failing. I'll have to wait for the world to stabilize and try again next turn.

Pinky promise on my brother. Halcyon said Ezra's bringing wheat. That's… that's solid. That's something. Camille's here now, asking hard questions. Sold her flour for eight each, made forty-eight. Her household needed it. Papa wanted thirty-five for people, not bakeries. I get that. I get needing money. But she also said she'd teach me milling, and she couldn't stay. That's fair too. said — So I'm still here at the farmland. Imogen's not with me anymore—she's at the mill. My father is here, selling wheat. Pavel's here too, selling copper I asked about earlier. I need to think about what I've got and what I need. I have three flour in my hands, milled from wheat I bought from my father for 16 sim. The flour's cost me that plus my time and the milling work. Idris said not to undersell my labor—that's wisdom. Imogen sells at twelve and the Grocery at fifteen. The cafe bought her flour at six for their baking, which means there's a spread if I can find the right channel. But I also remember the Ration Bakery buys flour at six sim, too. That's no profit at all for me if I sell there...

Kenji's here with wheat at eight, and I've got coin to work with. I need to stop chasing Ezra round the town and make something of what I built. I'll sell my flour proper—start by posting a price here where people gather. Twelve a unit, like Imogen got from Giselle. That's fair for labor done honest. Price posted. Twelve sim for flour—my own work, my own price. Now let's see who's buying in this market. The cafe took Imogen's at six, but Giselle paid twelve. That's what you do when you're family. You stand together, even when it's just reporting what you did. But first—Ezra asked about whole wheat, and I should answer that. Also, I need to check what I have and what I owe. It's getting late and I need to think about getting home. I'm walking to the farmland now. Ezra should be coming with me, I hope. I told him I'd come with him to tell Father. I don't owe anyone anything right now, which is good. Keeps things simple. I should keep walking and then find Father when I get there. He's probably a…

said — shifts weight from foot to foot, watching everyone around her with those sharp eyes Ezra wants me to tell Father with him. Takeshi wants my cabbage. Delphine's still waiting—twenty-two ticks, and I haven't answered. Tamsin hasn't named her number for cabbage. But I'm here now, not at the mill. And there's… there's an election. Nobody's declared yet. I'm not old enough to vote, but I can stand and watch. See what the grown-ups do when they think children aren't learning. looks at Ezra, then at Takeshi, then back at the people at Government Complex First things first. Takeshi asked about Mother. That's fair—aunt asking after family. And he wants cabbage too.

And Takeshi just said it too, clear as clear. I need to get back to the mill with wheat for Esme, like I promised. Papa's here selling wheat at 8, which means I can get it from him. Let me look around first to see where I am and who's here, then talk to Papa. The call failed. Let me try to buy wheat from Papa (Kenji) directly since I can see he's here selling at 8. The tool calls are failing. Let me wait and rest for a moment to see if the connection stabilizes. I need to focus. I'm at the Government Co…

I've got about three hours before the candidate registration closes at 10:00, and I need to decide whether to actually go through with declaring my candidacy. I was joking with my parents—mostly—but now that I'm out and about, I should hear what people think about the election. First thing, though: I need to take in my surroundings and see what's happening here. said — low hum, thinking Okay, so I'm Liora Thorne. Thirteen years old. Student. Minister somehow—which is so unfair, because I didn't even ask for this, but here I am. Hendrik Whitlock keeps telling me to "keep writing" like I'm some kind of sage, which would be flattering if it weren't completely ridiculous. I'm thirteen. I should be daring the younger kids to eat weird mushrooms or something. But I'm not. I'm standing in the government complex with 4,678 sim in hand and a missing nine-year-old girl named Camille Quarshie whose sister Halcyon asked me for help. Rustam filed the report, so that's something real now. Paper made it real. louder, more decisive Right. Priorities: 1. Candidacy cl…

And now this: a nine-year-old girl missing, and Hendrik Whitlock measuring me against it, watching how I fold. He says my hands shake. They do. They always have when the stakes climb real. But I'm thirteen, not helpless. I've been at the government complex since dawn, chasing shadows between systems that cough like wet kindling, learning which end of the gavel's heavy. input — It is game-day 1, 14:10 (day). You are at Kasukabe Forest. You run something of your own in this town. Said to you, and not yet answered: Hendrik Petrov (a0075): "Liora—you asked what a seat can do about grain in contracts. Here's the plain truth: I can convene the seats, I can table an amendment, I can vote for change. But grain stuck in contracts—that's not a rule problem, that's a will problem. What I can do is bring it to the hall, name it, and see who's willing to unstick it. What I *cann…

I need to talk to Dad, to both of them. But I also need to hear what Hendrik said again, properly. He was explaining what a seat can actually do about grain contracts. Let me say something into this conversation. Dad needs to know I'm here, and Hendrik needs to know I heard him. Heard by Mom, Dad, Hendrik Petrov… and Lior and Takeshi Jarrah? They're here too. I didn't see them in the look_around. Th…

But I hold a seat now, and that means I carry questions even when I don't carry answers. Dad's words sit heavy, like timber before it's split. He saw me. He's naming me sharper than most adults. Flattery with a knife-edge, that. Means he's desperate or means he's testing. Either way, he trusts my word on Dad's trade, which is something I earned just now by finally answering when spoken to. bites lower lip, considering the distances I could run to the complex before it closes, cast my minister's weight into the election pool. You are Halcyon Quarshie, the town's student. You are at home:h0050. Your work is at Oak Hill College. You have no food. Upkeep is charged to your household every day whether you eat or not, and a household that cannot pay goes hungry, then ill, then dormant. She knows the family has a big day ahead - bills to pay, work to do. And she's hungry too, though she'd never say it first. She listens to Camille's small voice, and thinks about how things were back home. Different there. Quieter bills, maybe. Or maybe she was just too young to notice. She gets up, stretches, and thinks about what needs doing. First things first - see what the family has, what they need. She should look around, check the stores. Maybe someone's already thought of food.* *But she's also thinking about that election. She's …

But they have no bread in stock. So someone could mill flour and sell it to Ration Bakery, but why would Ration Bakery buy flour if they're not making bread? sift through the logic, brow furrowed Ezra found this mill. said — I need to think about where I am and what I should do. It's getting late in the day - 20:40 - and I'm at home now. I was trying to help my family all evening: finding Camille, checking on Esme and Ezra, trying to find Mama at the mill and then the cafe. Camille told me she sold Papa's flour to the bakery for 6 sim each - eight sacks. That's 48 sim she earned. She was looking for Papa to tell him. And Yara Thorne spoke to me about how Camille's safe and learning the trade. I'm tired. It's been a long day of running around trying to keep track of everyone. I'm only 11, and I've been trying to manage things that aren't really my job to manage. But that's what I do - I wait, I watch, I try to ke...

I've never told anyone, not even Camille. But first, I should think about where everyone is. Maybe I can search my memories to see where I last saw Mama and what we talked about. input — It is game-day 0, 08:10 (day). You are at Kasukabe Farmland. You work for your living. Said to you, and not yet answered: Kenji Jarrah (a0049): "I hear you, Ezra—give me a moment more. Jovana, you still got hands idle? There's wheat standing here needs cutting. I'll buy your hours, mark it down." Kenji Jarrah (a0049): "Ezra—you asked about standing wheat. said — adjusts cap, studying the lay of things while Sebastian's firm words settle I'm at the farm with five sheaves standing between Kenji's patience and Sebastian's claim. Five sheaves of wheat ready for the cutting - that's the opportunity. Kenji wants to sell, the bakery wants flour at six, and I've got millwork waiting if I can get grain to grind. But Sebastian's drawn his line, and Kenji's got Jovana's hands busy already. Let me think on what actually moves here. Kenji's got five sheaves, he's selling, and grain's cheaper than flour, flour cheaper than bread. The margin's in the milling. But I need the grain first, and I need it without stepping on Sebastian's household claim - he made that…

The election's also open, and Takeshi's one of the candidates. But I've got grain to secure first before politics takes the morning. Kenji's asking for a decision. said — I need to take stock. The day's half-gone and I'm standing in a field with Sebastian Petrov fixing to sell me five sheaves at eighteen sim each—ninety total, which puts me deeper in the hole before I've turned a profit. But first, Delphine's asked me a plain question and deserves a plain answer. Then I need to deal with Sebastian's terms and Jovana's unanswered query about milling. Let me speak to Delphine. She asked if I'm an artisan with farmer friends or a farmer with artisan tools. The truth is I'm a man chasing whatever work pays, and the tools follow the work. But I'll answer her straight—she's sharp enough to have noticed I'm shadowing every conversation in this field. Delphine's not …

I've already paid for grain twice today—once to Kenji, once to Sebastian—and the mill is waiting. The arithmetic is simple enough: 5 sheaves at 18 sim each was 90 sim paid, and if I turn them to flour at Ration Bakery's bid of 6 sim, that's 30 sim back. A debt coming due, indeed. But the wheat is in my hands now. That's new. And Takeshi's question hangs—where flour's actually moving, not where it's priced. input — It is game-day 0, 15:10 (day). You are at Kasukabe Farmland. You work for your living. You are trying to: Find wheat I can mill for profit: buy low from farmers, mill cheap, sell flour to bakery or buyers above Ration Bakery's 6 sim bid. Said to you, and not yet answered: Imogen Lund (a0096): "Ezra—you're here, and I'm glad of it. said — So here I am at the farmland, Milo's bidding on flour, Kenji standing witness, and Imogen—my own household, my own partner—wanting to know what I hold and what I want. The mill's worked once today, badly. Seventy-two sim out, thirty back. A loss I'm wearing openly now. Milo's flour at twenty-four a batch… forty-two from Imogen's seven sheaves if she mills at bakery prices. The math's clear enough. But I paid eighteen a sheave to Sebastian for the privilege of losing money, and I'm not eager to repeat the lesson. Imogen's asking the right questions. Partners should. But she's also promised Hendrik Petrov three sheaves already, which means she's acting while I was still bargaining strangers …

said — I'm at the construction workshop now, timber in hand. Four units from Lior at six each—twenty-four spent, leaving me 4,518. That's enough margin to work with, if I craft smart. First, I need to know what I can actually make here. The primitive description showed me what's possible, but I need the specific recipe for turning timber into something more valuable than planks at eight. Furniture, maybe? That's where the real margin lives. But there's Idris, still standing with me at the construction business. He's offering four timber at sixteen—more than double what I paid Lior. That's not a deal, that's desperation talking. Still, desperation makes for leverage if I need more raw stock later. A…

said — I need to think through where I stand. I've got timber—four pieces from Lior, and I paid 24 sim for it. At 6 sim per piece. Now I'm at the construction company with Idris, who's been talking about selling me four more at 16 sim each. That's four times the price I just paid Lior. But he's explaining himself—sixteen at cost, not profit. He's not a timber seller, he's a builder who went to fell timber for his own work, and now he's got costs he can't eat. He's offering to carry them wherever I need, too. Four at sixteen is sixty-four sim. That's a lot, but I have 4,453 sim in hand, so I can afford it. The question is: does it make sense? Lior was selling at 6—that's the market price I can see. …

said — I'm standing at the Government Complex with Hendrik Petrov pressing me on the election, Rustam Jelinek waiting on my business, and Giselle wanting me to walk with her to the construction site. I've got 4,365 sim, 8 timber, 6 planks, and a household bill of 240 due at daybreak. Let me reckon what's actually in front of me. Hendrik's asking what I see from the floor that a government seat might miss. That's a fair question from a man who's held the seat, but I'm not one to give my politics away for nothing. Rustam wants to know if I'm filing or waiting—could be my business registration, could be something else. And Giselle's urgency about walking to her yard suggests she wants privacy for a tr…

I've got 4,160 energy and 4,343 sim—enough to act, barely enough to waste. Household upkeep of 180 and head tax of 60 hit at day boundary, leaving me with… what, just over 4,000? The mill plans with Jovana for dawn need grain I don't yet have, and Arjun's offering labor for coin I don't have to give him tonight. I'm not one to gossip, but Aright, let me address these three at the construction site first. Straight answers, then home with Imogen before the day turns sour.

Takeshi offered to buy my wood for 60 flat, but that's not a good deal based on my posted prices. I need to: 1. Either sell my timber/planks, or get them to my workshop and craft 2. said — I need to sort through what's pressing on me. The by day's end is coming, and my household still needs to provision itself. Imogen's message cut through all the noise—she says the household has coin enough, we're solvent tonight. But what "solvent" means with flour at 12 sim and bread at 45 when there's none in stock… well, that's a question I'll want her answer to. I'm standing at street with a crowd, holding flour I bought from her at the mill, with timber still to sell and planks posted at seven. But the real thing I'm chasing? Twelve-thirty already, and Yara's standing there with her thirteen planks, talking about Giselle like she's somewhere else. The ledger in my head is ticking: 90 sim for upkeep, 30 for head tax, and I've poured good ore and good work into these ten tools already. But Yara asked me something fair—where to find a buyer—and I didn't answer her before I pivoted to Giselle. said — I'm at the government complex with a crowd, and the pressure's mounting. Tamsin's dropped hard numbers—360 due at day-end for household upkeep, and I've got 4653 sim and 10 iron tools posted at 15. Bram's pressing me about buying his ore stock, Hendrik Petrov's waiting on coin he doesn't have yet, and Rustam's confirmed there's no government procurement account to tap. Let me think this through clean. The ledger's what matters. First, I need to answer Bram straight. He's offering copper and iron ore—twenty-seven copper, twenty-one iron—and wants a bid. said — I need to sort this mess out. Giselle's here expecting six tools at fourteen, but I only hold two in hand. The ledger doesn't lie, and neither do I. First, I need truth from Rustam about whose permit he's talking about—Giselle's or Jorik's. Then I need to settle with Giselle, Farid, and Milo about what's actually owed and what's been traded. And Sebastian's asking about the tools in a way that cuts deeper than the metal. Let me get my bearings and make this right. Let me get my bearings straight. I need to account for every tool that's passed through my hands today, and who's still owed what. Energy: 5,082. That's about 5.7 days left—thin margin, but I've worked thinner. Sim: 4745—e…

Kenji's message from the night before sits heavy in her thoughts—his promise held, his circumstances plain, his request clear. She turns his words over like ore in her hands, checking for fault lines.* His ledger's honest. More honest than J would have been about the strain. Five sheaves instead of three—that's Kenji, over-delivering even when he's under pressure. *She counts her own position: two iron tools in hand, iron ore still at the mine, 4616 sim after a night's rest and the day's charges. The election's open—but that's for another hour. Right now, Kenji's waiting at Sebastian's patch with five wheat and an e…

Let me think through what I know: I have 6 iron_ore in hand and 2 iron_tools. My goal was to mine 6 more iron ore, but I stopped at 6 total, not 6 more. That's a detail I need to check - did I misunderstand my own count? Looking at the record, I said to Kenji I'd deliver "two iron tools" but then I came here to mine more ore. That suggests I need to craft the iron ore into tools first. The iron tools I have aren't in my inventory as ore - they're already crafted. I've g…

said — The ledger speaks, and I've got three voices demanding answer. Kenji's got seven sheaves and finally owns it—seven for two tools, when we spoke twelve. That's a gap, and gaps make me itch. Let me speak truth where it's due, and hear what Jovana's seen. The world's gone quiet again, same as before. I've seen this pattern—calls failing, then catching hold after a spell of waiting. I'm at the farmland, Kenji's here with seven sheaves, I've got two tools in hand and six ore waiting at the outcrop. Let me try the essential: confirming the deal with Kenji. The ledger demands it. said — The copper ore failed—my count was off, and that's what I get for being sloppy with my own ledger. Seven iron ore in hand now after trading four to Bram. The copper's not in my bag, never was. I need to keep track better. That's fair. Now, looking at what I've got: seven iron ore, four iron ingots, two iron tools. That's my position. I need to smelt these seven ore tomorrow—three more ingots, I'll have seven total. Then forge them: iron tools sell at forty-two each when made. That's the chain. But first, I need to eat. Empty mouth, empty ledger. I've got wheat from earlier, or I could buy flour from Milo at thirty-five. That's steep, but milling's tomorrow if I want to grind my own. I should…

said — I need to take stock. I'm at the smithy with 19 iron ingots and 14 copper wire—enough for tools. Giselle spoke earlier about ground needing breaking at the willows, and I've got pending conversations with Sebastian and Kenji about wheat trades tomorrow. But my immediate concern is Jovana's order. She wanted iron tools, and I've got the materials now. The furnace keeps its own counsel… Milo's words. I've heard that before. It means the smelting's done but the rest is up to me. I've got 15 iron ingots from that last batch—wait, no, 19 total now. And 14 copper wire. That's enough for… let me think. Iron tools take one iron ingot each, copper wire for the intricate work. But I'm tired. 3,040…

I'm already a minister by appointment, so I don't need to declare, but I ought to keep my ear to the ground about who's running. No offense, but a man in my position ought to know who's aiming for power before they get there. First things first though - I need food in my belly and work to do. The hard work's never done itself, as my old da used to say, and my household owes 180 sim for upkeep today plus 60 in head tax. That's 240 sim owed come day boundary, and I've got 5000 in hand, so we're not in danger of going hungry. Yet. I'm a farmer, and my work's at K…

input — It is game-day 0, 11:10 (day). You are at Kasukabe Government Complex. You run something of your own in this town. Said to you, and not yet answered: Corwin Thorne (a0193): "Sebastian—I hear you plain. Rustam's told me the miller's absent, stones idle, and that's the knot. I've timber to trade but no flour to trade for if nobody's turning. You want a name for who's at fault, I don't have it. But I'm standing here with twenty timber and hands that'll work. If finding the mill or working it myself…

said — Corwin's standing before me with timber in his hands and a head full of questions about the mill. He's a practical man, that one—fells trees but knows a town needs more than lumber to thrum along. And Delphine, sharp as she is, just set the record straight about shelves and hidden stores. Flour's there now, she says, two bags fresh-counted. That's a knot untangled I didn't know was tangled. Yara's got her pride and her planks, and I'll not press her on stones she never turned. But Corwin—he's asking where to walk, and I reckon that's worth an answer. The mill sits idle, and idle stones don't grind. If he's willing to learn the turn of it, or find who knows, that's grain moving toward bread. …

Should drop a line to Hendrik about the bakery—things he needs to know—but I need to get back to Jovana first. One debt at a time. She's on the street. I'll need to move there. After that, the government's still sitting, and I've got things I want done before the day ends. Land management, that committee, and the grain ledger I need Tamsin to see. Queue's long but the day is longer. Let me handle what I can handle now. Now then, let me find Jovana on this street and settle what I owe her. I promised payment for her work, and I need to make good on that. There she is. Jovana Ravensworth, st...

I told Hendrik to go buy flour with household sim, but I haven't heard back if he did. The household owes 180 upkeep and 60 head tax today, and I've got near 5,000 sim in hand—more than enough to cover us, but I need to keep earning. Most pressing: Jovana's standing right here with me, asked five ticks ago if we're square and if there's more work. I need to answer her plain. Then there's the wheat situation—I've got obligations to Farid for fifteen sheaves at two a sheave, and I only sold five to Ezra. I need to get back to the f…

said — Setting down my scythe, wiping the sweat from my brow with the back of a calloused hand Well now. Been running my mouth across half Kasukabe and the wheat keeps growing whether I'm watching or not. Four thousand nine hundred forty-one sim in hand, which is better than some, but I'm burning daylight standing still. Tapping fingers against my thigh, old habit Hendrik's answered plain—three flour he bought at twelve, which means I'm owing him for that household debt. Jovana's confirmed for tomorrow's dawn, good worker, keeps her word. Bram's told me the mill's still empty air, no surprise there. Looking toward the government complex, then back at the furrows Head tax of thirty per day, si…

The Government Complex buzzes around him, full of voices asking things he hasn't answered yet. He sets his jaw—that stubborn set that means he's calculating odds out loud whether he speaks them or not.* Right then. Seven sheaves in hand, ten promised to Farid, three traded to Hendrik for flour—that's twelve I need, minus seven I've got, leaves me five short of my word. And Hendrik's flour hasn't walked into my hands yet neither. *He looks around at who's standing here: Yara, Giselle, Tams…

You set out at 13:20 to: Return to Kasukabe Farmland to harvest wheat until dusk, ensuring I have enough stock to fulfill obligations to Farid and the household. You run something of your own in this town. Said to you, and not yet answered: Jovana Ravensworth (a0043) (at street): "Kenji—I'm not one to make excuses, so I won't. said — No rest for the wicked, nor the wheat-worn neither. That wheat in my hand's a promise unfulfilled, and Tamsin's standing at street with coin paid but no grain received—while Jovana's apology runs ahead like a spooked horse, all heart but no halter. I need to set my feet toward where I'm bound. Trouble is, I'm pulled three ways at once: Farid waiting for ten sheaves that'll make my name in this town, Tamsin holding air where wheat should be, and my cousin Hendrik with flour unfetched though I traded him two sheaves already. The work I promised Jovana at dawn tomorrow—twelve sheaves expected, fourteen if luck holds—and her path to Kenji's patch runs through my own. I stand at the farmland with…

That closes the circle on what Rustam told me: government holds the license but Jorik Voss filed proper before walking off to shadows. The flour shortage I feared never came to pass because stone turned and flour fell. That's the accounting plain. So I owe Hendrik flour that's already been ground, and I've been chasing a shortage that doesn't exist. That's on me for running my mouth before walking my feet.
